

Adnams' ethics receive praise

11 August 2007

Adnams, the Southwold brewer and leisure retailer, has become first brewery to be given the Good Corporation's ethical business practice award.

The Good Corporation is a company designed to provide audits of corporate responsibility performance.

Adnams achieved the ethical business practice award by meeting all six key standards that include fairness to staff, customers, suppliers and subcontractors, community contribution and environmental protection, financial stakeholders, and management commitment.

"Good Corporation has a 23pc fail rate for its corporate responsibility assessment, so for Adnams to pass first time and with such good grades is a great credit both to the company's management and to its employees," said Leo Martin, director of Good Corporation.

Adnams managing director Andy Wood said: "We are absolutely delighted that our investment in all six key areas listed in the Good Corporation Standard is reflected in the results.

"At Adnams, we pride ourselves on developing an ethos where corporate social responsibility disciplines are embedded in all that we do."
